

Laila Khondkar has more than 16 years of experience in international development, and is presently working as the global Head of Advocacy and Policy-Child Protection, Save the Children International. She has worked with the organization in various technical, management and leadership positions in Bangladesh, Papua New Guinea, Liberia and Australia, and made contribution to national level work on child rights realization with a focus on ending violence against children. Her work included implementing programs with children and families in their communities as well as policy and legal advocacy.

Laila has worked with CARE International on HIV/AIDS and strengthening program quality. She offered consultancy support to UNICEF, UNAIDS and Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria (GFATM) on operations research and evaluation. Laila has also conducted research at Centre for International Development (Harvard University), Africa Centre for Health and Population Studies (South Africa), and Institute of Population and Social Research (Mahidol University, Thailand) on HIV/AIDS, reproductive health and access to medicines respectively. She has presented papers in international conferences, and provides thought leadership by writing opinion pieces on child rights and other development issues.
