

South America/Latin America: Job Vacancy Websites

This resource is designed for students that are seeking employment opportunities across the South America/Latin America region.

Working in South America/Latin America¹

Employment opportunities are very diverse across this region, leading exports include cocoa, coffee and corn, it is also well known for mining and forestry. Roles vary from country to country but options across the region are numerous. Undertaking additional research will help you identify which sectors and roles are in the most demand. Some of the listed websites advertise roles for across the region, some for specific countries.

It is important to remember that each nation may also have its unique approach to recruitment. Researching cultural recruitment norms is crucial in developing your understanding. You can do this usually by undertaking research on the internet. Key things to look out for are the typical length of a CV – will it need a photo? Will you need to write a cover letter? Will you need to complete an application form? Will you need a personal introduction?

If you are not a citizen or a resident of the country in which you wish to work, please check if there are visa regulations and language requirements for individual countries.
